Children in Scotland is running a series of consultations on behalf of the Scottish Government. The events are part of the Scottish Government's strategy to consult on proposed changes to the Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act 2004.

The events will bring together parents and professionals from across education, health, social work and the voluntary sector to discuss the proposed changes.

The events will:

- ◆ provide an opportunity to hear what amendments the Scottish Government are proposing to the Education (Additional Support for Learning)(Scotland) Act 2004
- ◆ provide a platform for delegates to make a valuable contribution to the consultation process.

Please note that these events are free of charge and that consultation document can be downloaded from: www.scotland.gov.uk/publications/recent

Who should attend?

These consultation events are aimed at all those who are involved in the implementation of the Education (Additional Support for Learning) (Scotland) Act and all those who are affected by it. This will include parents of children with additional support needs, professionals and practitioners working in education, health, social work or voluntary sector services.
